OFFICE: TBA	SECTION:	CREDITS: 3
OFFICE HOURS: TBA

COURSE FORMAT

Three hours of class time, plus an additional hour delivered through on-line or other activities for a 15 week semester, which includes two weeks for final exams.

COURSE PREREQUISITES

45 credits of 100 level or higher coursework

Note: Students who receive credit for POL 350 cannot receive credit for POL 250

COURSE DESCRIPTION

The students learn the historical evolution of human rights standards in the world and explore the principles and practices of human rights norms at the global and regional levels. Students explore the significance of international conventions, global and regional instruments, and multiple dimensions of human rights in a globalized context. Students also learn about the key debates on the issue of universality and cultural relativism, responsibility to protect, right to development, and gender discrimination. The course material will be a level above POL 250: Global Human Rights, with greater emphasis on higher level of research, analysis, writing, and presentation.

Upon successful completion of this course, a student will be able to:

- Define and articulate the evolutionary process, the principles and norms, and the instruments of global human rights.
- Assess the concept of universality when compared with the regional and local standards of human rights.
- Critically evaluate the issues of genocide and humanitarian intervention, right to development, right to protect the environment, rights of refugees and displaced people, rights of specific groups of people, and human trafficking.
- Research, document, synthesize, and evaluate information about international human rights from library, online and media sources.
- Demonstrate skills in research and analysis of primary and secondary materials on a selected aspect of human rights at the global and regional levels.
- Demonstrate oral communication skills in assignments and other work which focuses on problems and issues of human rights.
